SERIOUS ADVICE

TO THE

DISSENTERS.

HE Occasion of this Discourse is the Accounts, we find in the Publick News of the latter End of August, and the Beginning of September last, in which the Writers tell us, they are informed, that the Dissenters are very busy in several Parts of this Kingdom in Applying to their several Members of Parliament, and in Procuring Hands to Petitions for the Repealing of the Test and Corporation Act. My Concern for their Welfare makes me address my felf to them in this Manner. -I heartily wish, that the Toleration, which by our Laws they now enjoy, may continue to the End of the World in full Power, Force and Virtue, according as it was at first intended, and that they will make a good Use of it. I believe, that there are thousands in this Nation of fuch, who are well contented with it, as it is at prefent. But all are not of the fame Temper. I own, that there are some of the Dissenting Teachers, who have vindicated the divine Original of the Sacred Scriptures, and the fundamental Doctrines of Christianity, against the pretended Deists and real Atheists of the present Age. But their Numbers are few in Comparison of the Clergy of the Church of England, who have exerted themselves on the same Occasion. I own also, that most of the Dissenting Clergy have kept up strictly to the fundamental Doctrines contained in those Articles of the Church of England, to which they subscribed, that they might enjoy the Benefit of the Toleration Act, and that several of them have printed excellent Treatifes on the Dignity and Offices of Christ Jesus, as our Mediator, and on Faith in him, as the only Qualification to have an Interest in him, and as only necessary for our Justification and Salvation, and the Necessity of good Works in their proper Order. And for all these Things they justly deserve to be had in Respect and Esteem by all true Christians of all Denominations. But my Concern is, for Fear that fome rash, hot headed Persons among them will spoil all their Interest, by their unseasonable Endeavours for the Repeal of our present Laws. And therefore my Advice to them is, that they would feriously consider, First, What Numbers they have in both Houses of Parliament, who will espouse their Interest. And, secondly, How they can fairly answer, what will probably be objected against their Design; and if they find, that they are defective in either, that then they would make no Attempt at all, but leave every Thing to stand, as it is at this present Time.

As to the first of these, it is not my Advice alone, but the Advice also of Our blessed Lord and Saviour in these Words, (2) Which of you intending to build a tower, fitteth not down first, and consulteth the cost, whether he hath sufficient to finish it? Lest haply after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it, begin to mock him, saying, This man began to build, and is not able to finish. Or what king, going to make war against another king, setteth not down first, and consulteth, whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him, that cometh against him with twenty thousand? Or else, whilst the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an embassage, and defireth conditions of peace. So that the first Thing is, to confult their Interest in both Houses of Parliament, and if they are not certain of a Majority in both, let them drop their intended Project, and proceed no farther.

The next Thing to be considered is, what Arguments may be urged by their Opponents against their Design, ⁽²⁾ Luke xiv. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32.

Design, and how they can fairly answer them. And here I am so much their Friend, as to discover to them the whole Strength of their Enemies, as far as I know, and hope that they will take it kindly. I know not how far the opposite Party may run back in searching into these Matters; but Dr. Heylin hath given us such an Account of them in his History of the Presbyterians, that we may say, (b) If search may be made in the books of the records of our sathers, we shall find in the book of the records, and know, that this people was always a rebellious people, and burtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have moved sedition within the same of old time, for which cause they always fared the worse in the End.

I shall therefore only go back to the History of our Civil Wars in the last Century. And here I find, that fome pretended popular Grievances made many People in the Kingdom uneasy. The Diffenters knew too well, how to take the Advantage of Fishing in troubled Waters, and therefore they employed Alexander Henderson to make Remonstrances to King Charles I. for an Alteration in our Church Constitution, under the specious Pretence of a more pure and spiritual Way of Worship. The King condescended so low, as to answer at several Times his Impertinence in a very folid Manner. But when this Party found, that they were baffled in their Arguments, they had Recourse to Arms, as that which they thought would be more effectual, and accordingly they proceeded fo far as to behead the Earl of Strafford the King's Favourite first, Archbishop Laud next, and the King himself afterward, and fo they proceeded to a total Subversion of our Constitution both in Church and State. The Dissenters in England joined with their Brethren in Scotland, where the Rebellion first began; and it is not impossible, that what happened then, may not happen at another Time, fince it is a Plan already laid down for the same Purpose. The Consequence of this was the Driving King Charles II. and his Brother to take Shelter

Shelter in France, which upon the Restoration occasioned a strict Union between him and that Nation, infomuch that they joined their Forces together both by Sea and Land against the Dutch to weaken the Protestant Interest, and aggrandize the Power of that ambitious and perfidious Nation, and hath been the Caufe of all our Misfortunes ever fince. Accordingly King Charles II. would never hearken to a Bill for the Exclusion of his Brother from the Throne, who upon his Advancement, made fuch Advances to entail Popery and Slavery upon us, as must have been our utter Ruin, if we had not been almost miraculously delivered at the Revolution. So that all our Misfortunes ever fince, and what we now dread from the exorbitant Power of France, is wholly owing to the Artifices of the Diffenters, though we may charitably hope, that they did not design it.

Their first Pretence was only for a Liberty of Conscience, but they shewed afterward, that this was what they least intended; for as foon as they had gotten the Power into their own Hands, they turned out all the Orders and Degrees of the Church of England, and feized on all their Revenues, and made a Law to difqualify them from even Teaching a School, or being Tutors in any Gentleman or Nobleman's Family. And as they were not bred up to Labour, and could expect no Charity in common Begging; fo the intended Confequence was, that they must all be starved. After this the Diffenting Party proceeded to impose upon all Persons an Oath, which they called The folemn League and Covenant, in which, after fome specious Preambles, they bound themselves in the strongest Terms, which they could invent, to root out and destroy all the Orders and Degrees of the Church of England from the highest to the lowest, and never to be reconciled to them again, which they were all obliged to take, even to qualify themselves for the meanest Offices either in Church or State, military or civil. The Sufferings of the Episcopal Clergy, written in Folio, by Dr. Walker, cannot but draw Tears

Tears from the Eyes of all who read it, and make the Ears tingle of all who hear it, and yet the tenth Part is not told us. And we may defy the History of all the Popish Persecutions to produce a Parallel in any one Country, or in all the Popish Countries in so short a Time. In their printed Pamphlets in those Days, they always declared against a Toleration or Liberty of Conscience, as the Limb of Antichrist, and the Spawn of the Devil, and their Actions declared, that they meant, as they faid. Perhaps it will be objected, that these are only Expressions of a few private, hot headed Persons, for which the Publick was not accountable. But to fhew, that this was their unanimous Senfe, I am forced to give this fingle Inflance. The Assembly of Divines who met at Westminster, were then the Representatives of the whole Dissenting Clergy. They made a Confession of their Faith, in which they advance the Power of Church Censures, and Excommunication as high as any. They made a Directory for their Worship, to restrain the Licentiousness of their own unlearned Teachers, which they knew to be intolerable. They also made two Catechisms called The Assembly's Shorter and larger Catechism, in which they shewed a found and folid Judgment in Divinity, and against which I have nothing to object. In short, their eminent Learning caused them to be in the Main of the best Temper, and greatest Moderation among the whole Body of the Clergy. They also made Annotations on the Old and New Testament, which in the Main are found and judicious; and we do not find in any of their Writings, that they gave any Encouragement to extempore Prayer, but restrained it as much as they could. However, we may fee their Sentiments upon the Point before us in (°) one Expreffion, which may serve for all, and therefore I shall repeat it at large. They say, that As God is one Lord; so there is one Faith in him, one Worship, and one Baptism, Eph. iv. 4, 5, 6. It is said of the Gods of the Heathens, that they were good Fellows, and that they were content with with a Shew of Worship, because none at all is due unto them. For they are no gods, which are made with hands. Acts xix. 26. No more or better Gods are they, which are made with Brains, that is, with the vain Fancies and Imaginations of Men. (We all well know what they mean.) But he who is God indeed, will allow of no such Rival/hip in his Service. For he requireth (as his Due) the Devotion of all the Heart, with all the Soul, and with all the Mind, Matth. xxii. 37. And therefore he is a jealous God, Exod. xx. 5. And if Men take any Part of that from him, which (when it is whole and intire) is much too little for so great a God, his Jealousy then will be raised up to a wrathful Revenge. Ezra ix. 13, 14. Exod. xx. 5. Toleration then of diverse Religions is impious and dangerous. Impious (especially as some late Libertines have taught) if the most Paganish, Jewish, Turkish and Antichristian Consciences and Ways should be permitted. For 10, most horrid Blasphemies against God, and his Son Christ Jesus should be suffered. And dangerous, because thereby the Indignation of the Almighty may be much provoked, many Souls may be seduced to damnable Errors, and the Church and State rent into destructive Factions. It is contrary to Luke xiv. 23. Rev. ii. 20. 1 Cor. i. 10, and iii. 3, 4, 5. Mark iii. 22, to 28. Luke xi. 17. Phil. i. 27, &c. the Epistie of St. Jude, and many other Places of Scripture, which plainly taken together, do clearly evince a negative Conclusion against Toleration of several Religions, where there is a Power in the Church and State to Suppress all, but that which is true, and consonant to the Scriptures.

From their avowed Principles let us proceed to their Practices, which run parallel to (d) a Story recorded in the Scriptures, That the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the Inhabitants of Mount Seir utterly to slay and destroy them; and when they had made an end of the Inhabitants of Seir, every one helped to destroy another. Thus the Dissenters unanimously agreed utterly to destroy the poor Remainder of the Church of England, and when they had gained their Point, they fell together by the Ears among themselves. The Presbyterians turned out all the Independents. The Inde-

Independents rallied their Forces, and when they knew their Strength, they turned out all the Prescripterians, and according to their usual extempore Method they frequently prayed to God, to rot, consume, destroy and damn the opposite Party, whilst both pretended to be guided and directed by the same Sparit, which is not at all improbable.

The Presbyterians thus finding themselves utterly disappointed, had no Remedy left, but to join with the loyal Party for the Restoration of King Charles II. which is the same, as if a Man should endeavour to fink a Ship, in which he and his Enemy were both embarked, that he might have the Satisfaction of their both Perishing together. However they were so far in the Right, as to trust to the Clemency of the Church of England, whom they had so long and so grievously provoked, rather than to trust one another. Accordingly King Charles II. by a miraculous Providence, which brings Good out of Evil, came to the Throne of his Ancestors without any Effusion of Christian Blood, and thereby our happy Constitution was restored both in Church and State. I know, that the Differters are willing to have these Stories stiffed and buried in Oblivion; but if they go on with their intended Projects, they may happen to have them revived.

Upon this it was natural to expect, that all the Parts of our Constitution would make such Laws, as they might think sufficient for their common Security; which they did in the fourteenth Year of King Charles II. in two Atts of Parliament. The one is called The Att of Uniformity, and the other An Att against Conventicles, in which they explained what they meant by Conventicles, and what Penalties might be inflicted on such, who did frequent them. And this is commonly called The Bartholomew Act.

The Diffenters being thus outed from their Church Preferments, fet up feparate Meetings in feveral Parts of this Kingdom. In their Prayers and Sermons they took an especial Care to avoid all fcurilous, scandalous, and indeed all Manner of Restections on the Church of England. Their chief Study and Aim was to preach Christ crucified, and the fundamental Doctrines of Christianity, by which alone we can be faved. And the Laity (to the immortal Credit of both be it spoken) generally led religious, exemplary and confcientious Lives, infomuch that most People looked upon them to be honest, well meaning, though mistaken Persons, and such who deserved rather to be pitied than punished, and therefore we hear of sew or no Prosecutions against any of them, until the latter End of King Charles II's Reign.

But a Defign being laid to bring in Popery in the Reign of his Successor, some few furious and unthinking Persons, were stirred up in several Parts of this Kingdom to put the Laws in Execution against the Protestant Dissenters. The Design was deeply laid to fet us at Variance among our felves, thereby to ferve the Defigns of our Enemies, and make us their Tools to devour and ruin one another. However the common Clamours and Outcries against the Church of England were revived, that it was a Relict of Popery, that our Liturgy was only a Part of the Mass Book, that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was Idolatry, and all her Members were Popifhly affected, without Taking any Notice of the many Vindications printed on that Occasion, that we had laid aside all the Errors and Superstitions of that Church, that most of the Compilers of our Liturgy fealed to the Truth of it with their Blood in Queen Mary's Reign, and that the present Members of our Church retained the same Sentiments with their Ancestors, as it afterward appeared. But what Fence can be made against the Inventors of Lies and Scandals? And thus our Affairs stood at the Death of King Charles II.

When King James II. came to the Throne, he refolved to entail Popery and Slavery upon us, as fast as he could. But notwithstanding all these popular Clamous, his Creatures well knew, that the Church of England was the only Bulwark against them, that it was too strong to be attacked by open Force, and therefore they must endeavour to undermine it. They knew, that our Members wanted neither Zeal nor Arguments to support our Cause, and therefore their only Method must be to let the Dissenters loose, like fo many Lions or Bears upon us, whilst they were to play the after Game. Accordingly King James quickly proclaimed a Liberty of Conscience to all the Dissenters, not doubting but they would take that Opportunity to act against us without any Conscience at all. After this he published a second Declaration to the same Purpose, which was ordered to be read in all Parochial Churches. Very few of the Episcopal Clergy (if any) read it. Seven of our Bishops petitioned the King against it, in which they declared, that they did it not out of any Disrespect to the Dissenters, with whom they should willingly come into a proper Temper, whenever that Affair should be debated and settled in Parliament. For this they were fent to the Tower, and afterward arraigned and tried at the King's Bench Bar in Westminfter, where their Cause was learnedly argued by Counfellors of the Church of England, and they were honourably acquitted accordingly; whereas if they had been found guilty, it was expected, that it would have cost them their Honours and Estates, or a perpetual Imprisonment, if not their Lives. In this King's Reign four Members of the University of Oxford turn'd Papists, and had a Dispensation from him for the same, with an Order that one of them should keep his Headship, and the other three their Fellowships in their respective Colleges. After this, upon the Death of the President of Magdalen College in Oxford, the King contrary to Law fent a Mandamus for the Choosing of a Popish Successor, and when it was refused, all the Fellows and Scholars were forcibly turned out, and professed Papists were put into their Places; fo that our Liturgy was laid aside, and the Mass daily and publickly used instead of it. And upon the Death of the Dean of Christ Church in Oxford, the Nomination being in the King, he appointed also a Popish Successor, by which Means Mass was publickly celebrated B_{2} celebrated in the College, though not in the Chapel. In fhort, Mass Houses were fet up in most Parts of the Kingdom. A Standing-Army was kept to force Potery upon us, and foon after feveral Regiments of Irish Papists were raised, and brought over from Ireland for the fame Purpose. Thus the Storm fell very heavily upon the Church of England, and we were in continual Danger of being maffacred for our Religion. But what did the Diffenters do all this While? Truly, they, like Gallio, feemed to care for none of these things, They addressed the King from all Parts of the Kingdom to thank him for his gracious Indulgence. They promifed to stand by him with their Lives and Fortunes, and to give their Votes, and use their utmost Interest with his Party to procure such Members of Parliament, as should repeal the Test and penal Laws, which under God was the only Security that we had at that Time, to prevent Popery from coming in like an overbearing Flood upon us. And it must be said, that upon all those Occasions, they were true to their Word. And now the Clergy of the Church of England exerted themselves in Answering all the Popish Books, which were printed at that Time, and to their immortal Honour confuted that Religion with fuch folid Arguments, as never could, and, never will be answered. Their Writings fill several large Volumes in Folio, and in a small Print, when there were but two Books printed by the Diffenters on these Subjects, and both might then be bought for eighteen Pence. But now, though they hardly wrought one hour, except to ruin us, they would fain be equal to those, who have bern the burden and heat of the day for our common Prefervation. Their common Discourse at that Time was, that if they had but the Liberty to worship God according to their own Consciences, they should not only be easy, quiet and contented, but also very thankful, and never defire any farther Fayour, because they knew they deferved none. They punctually performed their Promise to the Papists. But how they have performed their Promifes to others, and what Returns they have made for the real Favours, which they have received, will appear from the following History.

When King William, our glorious Deliverer, fet us free from the Danger of Popery and Slavery, the Wind turned about, and the Diffenters in England well knew, how to turn about with every Wind. They then joined with the Church Members in addreffing the King from all Parts of the Kingdom, and, I believe, very heartily, as they had good Reason to do. But in Scotland Affairs took another Turn: Here they had not the Majority, there they had, and quickly took Care to let the World know it. that the first Thing, which they did, was to declare, that they would not acknowledge King William for their King, unless he would utterly abolish all the Orders and Degrees of the Church of England, among them, and put the Dissenters at once into the Possesfion of all their Churches, threatning, that in Case of Refusal, they would chuse another. King William knew very well the formidable Power of France, and that the Opposing it would admit of no Delay, nor Debates, left the Low Countries should be swallowed up by that devouring Monarch; fo that he was reduced to the unhappy Necessity of Granting it, and he granted it accordingly. Upon this they immediately turned them all out, with the same Violence, as they used formerly in all Parts of these Kingdoms, leaving the poor Clergy to beg their Bread in England, and in other Parts, where they could find it. The Mob was let loofe upon them wherever they went. Some they mocked, at others they cast Stones, others they beat, and fent them all away miserably handled. Here was another Tragedy like the former in England. The Consequences of which with some other of their Proceedings will be afterwards mentioned.

As foon as King William and Queen Mary were fettled on the Throne, they took Care to procure an Ast of Parliament in Favour of the Protestant Dissenters, which we call The Toleration Ast. This was in itself a good and seasonable Ast, and it is heartily wished wished, that it was observed according to the true Intent and Meaning of it. But this did not long fatisfy the Diffenters. They longed for Places of Trust, Honour, Profit and Authority, which was never intended for them, and foon found out a Way to obtain them by an occasional Conformity in receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper kneeling in the Church of England, which according to their Language is occafional Idolatry. But any Thing for Profit and Honour. They put their Interest into one Side of the Scale, and their Conscience and Religion into the other. And here Interest happens to outweigh Conscience, and ever since Religion seems but a light and vain Thing among them, and never recovered to be, as it was before. Thus they left their first Love. And as Liberty of Conscience abused made them gross Hypocrites; so it is to be feared, that the Repealing of the Test and Corporation Acts will make them downright Atheists.

However their Teachers were not so squeamish in this Case, as it was thought that they would have been. The chief Argument, and that which lay most at Heart, was, If the Congregation could have more Money by Places, they should get more Money by Contributions, and therefore they must encourage them in it. And this feemed to be unanswerable at that Time. But the Event proved contrary to their Expectation. Many of those who received the Sacrament, found, that there was nothing fo dreadful in our Liturgy, and nothing of Idolatry in our Celebration of our Lord's Supper, as it was represented, and instead of occasional they became constant Conformists. The Preachers seeing that the Hopes of their (c) Gains was going off, began to think, that this would never do, the craft by which they had their wealth, was in danger to be set at nought, they should be despised, and their magnificence should be destroyed, and now they groaned, Ob our Christmass Box! our poor Christmass Box! So that now they must unteach what what they had taught before, and make that an Abomination, which at first was highly commendable. And the Laity must not in Conscience qualify themfelves for Offices, because the Teachers could not in Conscience run the Risque of Losing their Incomes.

Let us now view the Arguments, which they before urged in Vindication of occasional Conformity. The first was the Example of St. Paul in (1) circumcifing Timothy, and (8) purifying bimself in the temple. But this did not come up to the Purpose. It would have been very material, if they could have proved, that the Apostles or any other Christians observed the Jewish Passover to qualify themselves for any Offices in the Jewish State; but unless they had proved this, they proved nothing. The next is what St. Paul said of himself (h) I have made myself servant to all, that I might gain the more (which according to their Interpretation must be, Gaining more Places of Profit and Trust, and Money into their Pockets.) And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain (from) the Jews, to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain (from) them, who are under the law. To them that are without law, as without law (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ) that I might gain (from) them, that are without law. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain (from) the weak. I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means gain some (Money.) But since the Apostle tells us in the next Verse, that this be did not for Interest, but for the Gospel's sake, that others also might be partakers thereof, this spoils their Interpretation. To this may be added the Example of St. Peter, (1) who before that certain came from James, did eat with the Gentiles; but when they came, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing those, which were of the circumcision. And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation. But in this St. Paul withstood St. Peter to the Face, because he was to be blamed, and said, that he walked not aprightly, and according to the truth of the Gospel; and this spoils the other Interpretation. It would have been more material to have alledged (1) the Example of Naaman the Syrian, who bowed himfelf in the house of Rimmon to keep the Place which he had got under his Master; but I do not find, that they infifted upon it.

These Practices occasioning popular Discontents brought on an AET against occasional Conformity in Quen Ame's Reign, which was most violently oppofed by the Lay Diffenters, as if their Great Goddess Diana, or their All was at stake; which shewed, that the Laity could eafily have been brought to a Compliance, if either the Pope from abroad, or their Teachers at home (which might have been as well) would have given them a Dispensation.

However the Act was passed with the utmost Difficulty, and long Opposition. The Diffenters now have another Stratagem. The Succession to the Crown was fettled on the illustrious House of Hanover; which brought King George I. and his Family to it, and I pray God, that his Posterity may continue in it to the End of the World. The Dissenters slily and craftily infinuate themselves into the good Opinion of Baron Bothmar, his late Majesty's Embassador in Great Britain to Queen Anne, and took Care to infinuate also into him, that all the Church of England in general were in the Interest of the Pretender, and that they were the only Friends to the Protestant Succession; and he being deluded took Care to instil the same Notion into his Master. This Proceeding of the Dissenters was base, ungrateful, spiteful, scandalous, false, sly, undermining, and malicious. But what will they not do for their good old Cause, as they called it. Church of England Members, little suspecting the Snake in the Grass, knew nothing of it, and so had no Opportunity to vindicate themselves, and they were condemned as guilty without a Hearing. But the true Case was this. The Nation is divided into several Parties. One are Papists. These by Principle are against the Government. Another are Nonjurors, who may incline the fame Way. These are now but few, and these we give up, both of them being none of us. Another Part are of the Church of England; and another Part are Dissenters. As to the Members of the Church of England, they can vie with any other for Loyalty. It was a Church of England Parliament, which fettled the Succession, as now it is. It is a Church of England Parliament which gives Supplies to carry on the War. The whole English Army, which fought for our Liberties, are of the fame Church, very few excepted. If any Members of the Church of England are uneasy, they are as far from desiring a Popish Government, as they always were, and their Uneasiness is occasioned, because the Dissenters will not let us be at quiet, and are still incroaching upon us, and undermining of us. But it is now come to that Pass, that whoever is uneasy at their Practices, is reprefented as disaffected to the Government, as if they were our Governors, or what they aim to be. And we cannot but be uneasy at the Thoughts of it, because we always found, that their tender Mercies towards us are cruel. Thus (.) Ziba by false Suggestions and sly Infinuations, rendered Mephibosheth odious to King David; but it was not any Zeal to him or his Family, that prompted him to it, but a covetous Desire to get the other's Estate to himself, and he succeeded so far in his Defign, as (m) to get Half of what he aimed at, though he could not obtain the Whole. And that was too much, fince he deferved rather to be punished than rewarded for his Pains.

Let us now see, what (a) the Dissenters have done. I cannot find one Act of Loyalty in King William or Queen Anne's Reign, but what was common to others, or what they could not avoid, fuch as Paying of Taxes, &c. and this cannot be reckoned as a Merit. In the latter End of Queen Anne's Reign there were strange Advances to lay aside the Succession in the House of Hanover, and as most People think, to bring in the Pretender. The Diffenters were uneafy at them, and so was the Church of England too, as much as they. Their Loyalty was only a Pretence, by which they imposed on the late King and Baron Lothmer However their Plot took Effect, and they furce seed in a Law to repeal the AET against Occasional Conformity. So that it appears, that their Service, fuch as it was, was not intended for nothing. But though we grant, that the Ministry were then engaged in an ill Defign; yet how doth that affect the whole Body? If a Conspiracy was formed against the present Czarina of Muscovy, must that affect the whole Greek Church? If a few Diffenters were in a Plot, must the whole Body be blamed? We can only fay, Let the Guilty fuffer the Law, and let the Innocent be cleared. But to come lower down. When there was a Defign of Excising Wine and Tobacco, did they not revile the Government, as much as any others? Did they not flew themselves Men of like Passions with others? And that if any Thing of theirs was touched, they would abuse the Government as much as others? They are very much belied, if this was not the Case in England.

^{(1) 2} Sam. xvi. 1, 2, 3, 4. (m) 2 Sam. xix. 24 to 31. (n) Denique quid verbis opus eit? Spestemur agendo. Ocid. Metam. Lib. 13.

And now let us go into Scotland. Here we find their Loyalty to King George I. in Raising above ten thousand Men under the Command of the Earl of Marr in Rebellion against him, until they were routed by the English Forces at the Battle of Dunblain. This encouraged the Pretender to land among them, and we do not find that they raised any Forces to oppose him, nor that one City shut their Gates against him. On the other Hand, he was proclaimed as their King, a rich Crown was made for him, and every Thing prepared for a solemn Coronation, and he was received in the University of Aberdeen with all the Demonstrations of Joy imaginable, and publick Speeches on that Occasion. And were not the Dissenters in England wholly neuter? Did they ever address King George I. as they did King James II. and as in Gratitude they ought to have done, to stand by him with their Lives and Fortunes? They only stood by, and did nothing, that they might see the Event, and join with the strongest Side. So that the Case comes to this at last, The Scotch Presbyterian Army fought to bring the Pretender in, and the Church of England Army drove him out.

Let us next fee their Loyalty in England. The vile Books printed against Monarchy shew their Temper. We had first The jecret History of the four last Reigns, viz. King James I. King Charles I. King Charles II. and King James II. And all this must be defigned to fhew, that all Monarchs are alike to them, and that if King William would not do, as they would have him, whilst he was alive, they would reproach his Memory, when he was dead, which was the worst, that they could do. To carry this farther we we had Rushworth's Collections of the Proceedings of the Parliament in Oliver's Time, who was their Clerk. But this being too tedious, and too candid, they must go to France for fresh Supplies, and Rapin's. History of, England, must be translated and printed here, as if we had not Historians enough of our own Nation, and we may be fure to find nothing in that Treatife in Favour of the English Monarchy. And because all this is too little to do Mischief, the History of Oldmixon, a Dissenter, must bring up the Rear to the present Times, whose Pen was dipt in Gall inflead of Ink, and plainly shewed, what he would be at.

But it may be asked, How doth it appear, that the Disserters had a Hand in all this? I answer, from their former and present, both Practices and Principles. They will be apt to say, that this Book was written by some Clergyman of the Church of England, but they have only the same Proof of this, as we have of the other. And they may as well father this Treatise upon a Dissenter, as they can father the others upon any Members of the Church of England.

But now let us come to the Observation of the thirtieth Day of January. If it happens on a Week-Day, they do not preach upon it, or fhew any publick Observance of it, neither is it expected, that they should; but it is expected, that they should be filent. On the other Hand they had formerly, and fince the Revolution, a mock Feast, or Supper on this Day upon a Calve's Head, which was called, The Calve's Head Club; fo that they had rather turn Cannibals, and prey upon their own Species, than not shew their Approbation of the Fact. However, this being too scandalous to be continued, hath been laid aside for several Years. But if the thirtieth Day of Fanuary happens to be upon a Sunday, their Preachers are even with us, witness a Sermon printed on (°) this Text, The curse causeless shall not come, and another on (P) this, The Jews laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove, while he ansevered for himself, neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the Temple, nor yet against Cesar have I offended any Thing at all. Any one may see, that the Words of the Texts lead them to discourse on these Particulars. First, That the Beheading of King Charles I. was not contrary to the Laws of the Land. Secondly, That the total Subversion of Monarchy was no Offence to the Royal Dignity. Thirdly, That the total Subversion of Episcopacy and all Orders among us was no Offence to the Church. Fourthly, That the Reproaches cast upon them on this Account are causeless, and not to be valued. These I leave to the Reader to answer. And lastly, If it was an Offence, their Forefathers, and not they were guilty of it. To this I answer, that they might be excused, if they did any Way declare their Abhorrence of the Facts, if they did only fay with the Feres,

Jews, (9) If we had lived in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets, it might be fufficient. But as long as they continue to vindicate the Facts by the Methods before mentioned, and their Preachers extenuate their Crimes from their Pulpits, they must excuse us, if we bring them in guilty together with their Ancestors, and fay, that they are witnesses to themselves, that they are the children of them, who killed the prophets, and only want to fill up the measure of their fathers. Several of them have pleaded for the utter Abolishing of the Observation of the thirtieth Day of January, because they who were guilty, are dead and gone long fince. But if this Argument is of any Force, it will plead more strongly for Abolishing the Observation of the fifth Day of November, because that happened above forty Years before the other. Thus the same Argument, which would lessen the Abhorrence of our $\bar{D}if$ fentions, will also lessen our Abhorrence of Popery. But I think, that we should continue the Observation of both; because the Men of the same Principles in both Respects continue still among us.

And now let us return to what was mentioned before, and view their Affection to the Church of England. When King George I. came to the Throne, the Ast against Occasional Conformity was repealed by the false and subtle Insinuations of the Dissenters to that King, and their Teachers declared the Lawfulness of it. They thought, that by this Crast they should gain more Wealth. If the Laity grew rich by this Method, they might enlarge their Boxes, whilst the others enlarged their Barns, and so it was a comfortable Doctrine to both, and they well knew the Use and Application of it.

However, Things happened contrary to Expectation. Many of their Chief, who conformed occasionally, did afterward conform constantly, and thought it not proper to pay in both Places. Their Teachers then tack'd about. They saw, that this would not do, do, and that the very Thing, which (as they thought) would prove for their Wealth, did prove unto them an Occasion of Falling, so that they must preach down, what they preached up before. And now as the Church of Rome locks up the Scriptures in an unknown Tongue from the common People; fo they must lock up their Congregations from Going to Church for the fame Reason, that is, left they should fee their Errors. Thus their Teachers cry down Occaficnal Conformity for their own Interest. Their Hearers mind them, when they have no Place of Profit in View; but when that happens, they cry, This is a hard Saying, who can bear it? Religion is become nothing but Interest. And why should not the Hearers mind their own Interest as well as their Preachers? And so flands the Case at this Time.

And now it will be asked, why they did not get the Test and Corporation Act repealed, soon after they had repealed the Act against Occasional Conformity, and when they knew their own Strength? To this I anfwer, That they would have done it, if they could, and attempted it to the uttermost. But their Friends in the House of Commons considered, that if these were let farther into Places, they themselves would have the less Prospect, and answered them with Not fo, lest there be not enough for us and you. The Lord Barrington, a professed Dissenter, Sir Charles Wager and others, whom they depended on, told them, that they had done enough for them at the Present, and if they proceeded any farther, it might be apt to put the Nation in a Ferment. That two large Steps would spoil all, and do themselves a Mischief at last, and therefore they should oppose it. Thus Religion is the grand Pretence; but Self-Interest is at the Bottom of all. And this dropt the Attempt for that Time.

But fince the Toleration Act they had another Artifice, which was to engage the Clergy of the Church of England in Controversy with them by Letters from one to another, and so both were printed. Thus Dr.

Bennet, Dr. Welles, Dr. Hole, Mr. Lacey, and others, were engaged against Mr. Shepperd, Mr. Doyley, Mr. Moor, and Mr. England, &c. But the Event was, that the Diffenters were utterly baffled. They found, that they had neither good Arguments, nor found Learning enough to maintain their Cause, and so this Attempt, like the Calve's Head Club, was laid afide.

Their next Artifice was to abuse the Toleration AET, by introducing from thence all Sorts of Toleration whatfoever, contrary to the very Defign of the A.F. Thus (1) their Liberty is made an occasion for the flesh, and (5) a cloak of maliciousness, and is intended to bring over all Dissenters, all Jews, Turks, Insidels, and Heriticks, all Athists, Deists, and Freethinkers, all Methodists and Moravians, and whatever else can be flarted up, into their Party, that so, if possible, they may out do us with their Numbers, and ruin us at last. All these will gladly be exempted from all Laws, Pains, and Penalties. They will gladly be united with them upon these Terms. And for this Purpose their universal Toleration, farther than the Law allows, is exactly calculated in all their printed Sermons and Discourses on this Subject.

And indeed we have been long peftered with Difcourses of this Nature. One would think by them, that the poor Diffenters are in a deplorable Condition, and that the Church of England was the most perfecuting Church in the World. That in every Market Town there was a Rack to torment them, in every City there was a Smithfield to burn them, and in every Parish there was a Gallows to hang them. Dr. Grosvenor, who is reckon'd to be a Man of the greatest Temper and Moderation among them, in his Sermon against the Persecutions of the Church of Rome, brings in the Kings and Bishops of the Church of England as roaring Lions, but he takes no Notice of his own Party in this Nation, because they were always innocent Lambs. He begins with the Reformation, and brings brings the Tragedy down to the Star Chamber. He might have gone a little lower, and spoken of THE GREAT REBELLION, and the Confequences of it, which occasioned more Persecutions than all which have happened from all the Protestants ever fince the Reformation. But he was not willing to defile his own Nest, and so he passed it over with a prosound Silence. But what means all this Outcry? Are any of them moleited? Is there any Harm done them, or intended, if they can but be quiet? Every Body knows, that the Charge is impudent, false and scandalous, and that there is no Occasion for such Pamphlets, which are only laugh'd at, and fpoils the Credit of every Thing elfe, which they tell us. But here they act like froward Brats, who kick, pinch, fcratch, roar, and cry, as if they were murder'd, when no Body hurts them, and the only Reason is, because they cannot have their own Wills in every Thing. They would fain represent all the Members of the Church of England as so many mad Dogs, and then fet all the Country upon them to worry them, and run them down.

To gain their Ends more effectually, Mr. Foster prints two Volumes of Sermons. One of them was (1) against Heresy, in which he endeavours to prove, that no one ought to be profecuted for the vileft Opinions, but before one who knows the Heart, or God This was the constant Plea of all Hereticks in all Ages. Dr. Stebbing engages in the Controversy. The Diffenters laugh in their Sleeves and stand on Tiptoe, to see the Event of their Great Goliah entring the List, and defying the armies of the living God. They now conclude, that if they can but demolish the Authority of the Bishops, they might more readily strike at their Order. Mr. Foster managed his Caufe with all the Arguments, which could be urged, and never wanted Words to express himfelf. But he was foon forced to change his Opinions nions (") from one to another, as a Bankrupt Debtor runs from House to House for Fear of being caught, and at last gives up the Cause.

And now let us see the Consequences of these Proceedings. The Diffenters have no Power nor Authority to suppress these Things, and (as I believe) no Inclination to it. Though the vileft, abfurdeft, and most monstrous Opinions in the World, and fresh ones every Day are daily started; yet they must go on without Controul. There is no King in their Ifrael, and every Man is at Liberty to do whatever is right, and preach whatever is good in their own Eyes. Indeed, fometimes the Congregation have been fo offended with an heretical Preacher, as to withdraw their Subscriptions, and turn him out. This hath happened in some few Places, and to their Credit it may be spoken. But the Examples are so few, the Judges fo unfit, and the Artifices of heretical Teachers fo many, that the Remedy is not equal to the Disease. Formerly the Presbyterians had some Authority, which was lodged in those, that they called The Assembly of Divines; but that is all lost long ago: The Presbyterians are all turned Independents, and their Teachers are willing that it shall be so, that they may be absolutely under no Controul nor Subjection. Now an Independent Church, or a divided Unity is to me a Contradiction. It is the fame, as if we should call a Line of Sand a Rope, or a Heap of Stones a regular Building, or that a Body, which is cut in Pieces, and hath no regular Connexion. It is like ferving the God of Order without any Order at all. And it is like making Christ the Head of a Body, all whose Parts are of the same Kind, call them Eyes, Ears, Tongues, Hands or Feet, or any Thing elfe, what you will. And this is the Condition, to which they are bringing themselves, as fast as they can.

Secondly, The Confequence is as bad in other Ecclefiaftical Affairs. The turning Liberty into a general Licentiousness hath brought in such a Licentiousness of the Press, as was never known, since it first began. We have now the Authority of the facred Scriptures called in Question, the Divinity of Our Saviour denied, all the worst of Vices encouraged under The Fable of the Bees, the Government of God in the Care of the World exposed, the Eternity of Hell Torments exploded, and God represented as all Love, Goodness and Mercy without any Regard to his infinite Juffice, as if there was no fuch Thing as a future Judgement, or a future Punishment, but only future Rewards. And all these Things are generally treated with the utmost Sophistry and Ridicule, which the Devil can invent. All these Sorts of Books are greedily bought up by Atheists, Deists, Arians, Socinians, Freethinkers, Libertines and others, to confirm them in their Opinions and Herefies, and harden them in their Vices, and then they lend their Books to others, for the fame Purpose. The Poison is taken by fome, who refuse the Antidote, and by others, who know not where it is, or cannot come at it. The Nation now fwarms with fuch Monsters in every Corner, and even among the politer Sort, who fet up to be the greatest Masters of Reason. The Mischief done is inexpressible. Some deny, that God takes Notice of what is done in this World, because they wish it was so. Others deny the Authority of the Scriptures, because they curb them in their Vices. All this may justly provoke God to vindicate the Honour of his Providence, his Son, and his facred Writings, and fo deliver us over for a Time to be fcourged by our common Enemies, that we may learn not to blafpheme. And this is the Case, which the Dissenters are bringing in upon us by an unbounded Licentiousness.

The Relaxing of all Ecclefiaftical Discipline in the Church of England may seem but a small Thing to some, and is wished for by others. If a Person is punished in the Bishop's Court for the most notorious Crime, there is such an Outcry, as if all the Persecutions of the Church of Rome were coming at once upon the whole Nation. These popular Clamours artfully raifed, and industriously spread have relaxed their Authority; fo that they they think it not prudent to put that little, which still remains, in its due Force, for Fear of a popular Odium, and the Consequences of it. From hence springs up such a Parcel of new Seets, one of Henly, another of the two Wesleys, another of Seagrave, another of Whitesteld, and another of the Moravians, and any Butcher or Collier, or others of mean Employments may begin a new Sect, in any Place without any Ordination or Licence at all, blasphemously pretending a Call from God. They are all divided among themselves, but all united in Conspiring the Ruin of the Church of England by their fubtil, violent, bitter, and unchriftian Practices. And feveral of these Sectaries were bred up and ordained in the Church of England. All the Diffenters faw this with Approbation enough. They naturally thought, that if we fought with one another, they might have an Opportunity of Running away with the Bone. Afterward followed Field Preaching. This was very pleafing to them, and looked upon to be a very good Omen, because it was so before the Civil Wars, when they got all the Power into their own Hands, which they now aim at: However though their Numbers daily increase, and may grow "formidable; yet it affects them more than us. These Sects were begun by Enthusiasm, Extempore Prayers, and Preaching. This had not fo much Effect upon the Church of England, because they were used to another Method; but it caught the Dissenters in their own Snare, infomuch that three to one of the Separatists, in Comparison of Church Men, are gone off to them. So that the Congregations of the Diffenters lessen, and their Teachers are as much affected with it, as the City Lecturers. And now their Teachers begin to wish, that they had never been set up, being very much concerned for their own Incomes. But there is no Remedy. They must go on and prosper according to the Diffenters Principles. And this is the un-D 2

happy Condition, to which they have reduced themfelves.

And this is the Cafe also in the State. The Relaxing the Rules of the Church hath occasioned the Relaxing of the Laws of the other. Indeed where Vices affect human Interest, the Offenders are often profecuted and brought to Justice; but when the Glory of God is concerned, there is no Care taken to preserve it. The Magistrates care for none of these Things, but love to have as little Trouble as possible. The Societies for Reformation of Manners are distolved, and the very Name of an Informer is become odious. Now Whoredom, Adultery, Drunkenness, and Profaning of the Lord's Day, ride triumphant in Despight of the Laws. The detestable Sin of Sodomy, which before was feldom named, and People hardly knew, what it meant, is now grown common. A Man cannot go into the Streets, or fcarcely into an Alchouse, but he hears such Oaths and Curses of all Sorts, both old and newly invented, as are enough to make the Ears tingle, and the Heart ake. And this is the Effect of an unbounded Toleration.

And in this Cafe the Diffenters have a particular Cause to complain. Before the Toleration AET was passed, they had a Shew of Religion at the least; but I believe, that it was then real. But fince there hath been a woful Degeneracy among them, which they will not deny. Before, they promifed, that they would be contented and thankful; but fince they have broken their Words, they have broken in upon Religion, and this will bring them to have no Conscience of their Oaths at last. Before the Toleration they seemed to ferve their God; but fince the Abuse of it, they are all intent upon Places of Profit, and how to ferve their Mammon, though they neglect their other Master. They are become as crafty, fubtle and defigning as any other Men; fo that in this Respect they cannot pretend to any Manner of Difference. Religion is fo declined fince the Toleration, that a fober Man among them could almost wish, that they never had had any Toleration at all. So that if they get into the Places of Authority, Honour, and Profit, which they aim at, there will be Danger, that it will be much worse, and then in Time they will have no Need of an Act for Liberty of Conscience, because they will act without any Conscience at all

This I hope, may be enough to fatisfy the Diffenters concerning the Repeal; but perhaps their Enemies, and the Enemies to the Repeal may farther add:

First, That there is a nearer Union between the Dissenters in England and their Church in Scotland, than most People are aware of. We never find that they blame them for Turning out all the Orders and Constitutions of The Church of England, and destroying both Root and Branch. On the other Hand, we find the Scotch Universities very liberal in Conferring the highest Degrees of Honour on their Brethren the Teachers in England, and they are as ready to receive them, and as fond of them, as a Child is of a Feather in his Cap; so that we can hardly see three of them together, but one of them is a Dostor. All this shews, that they are in perfect Unity one with another. They retain the same Principles, and only wait to put the same Practices in Execution.

Secondly, An Enemy will fay, that others are easy in Cases of the like Nature. The Parliament hath made a Law, that none shall sit in the House of Commons, but such as have Estates in Fee of three hundred Pounds a Year. And can we think, that a Merchant, who is worth ten thousand Pounds, may not be as fit to reprefent a Trading-City, as one who hath an Estate? But we find no Contention about it. They fay, that they have a natural Right, that is, as I apprehend it, every one among them is born a Privy-Counsellor, a Judge, or a Justice of the Peace, or at least a common Counsellor. However natural Rights may be restrained by civil Laws. Every Man hath a natural Right to Liberty, but yet Madmen or Debtors may be confined. Every Man hath a natural Right to his Estate, and yet in many Cases it may be forfeited. Every Man hath a natural Right to his Life, and yet Malefactors may be punished with Death. An Heir may be very capable of Managing his Estate at eighteen Years of Age, and yet he is kept out of it until he is one and twenty. And if every Man hath a natural Right to Places; yet many may be kept out, when it is judged, that their Admission will do more Flarm than Good. Since the Toleration the Diffenters have had Funeral Sermons of Sundays. This hath forced the Clergy of the Church of England to take the same Method, instead of Preaching, whilst the Corps was prefent. This brought Funeral Sermons into Difesteem, infomuch that by a moderate Computation the Clergy of the established Church have lost near fixty thousand Pounds a Year. We make no Clamour about it against the Diffenters, because in Charity we think, that they did not intend it. But if by any fuch Accident the Diffenting Clergy had loft but the fixtieth Part of fuch a Sum, it may eafily be gueffed, what a Roaring and Outcry we should have had of Perfecution. And by this we may fee the Difference of Tempers.

Thirdly, Others will think, that there is no Occasion for fuch a Repeal. If they can be Occasional Conformists, Why did they make fuch a Clamour and Outcry against the Act, and were never at Quiet, until by all Means fair or foul, they got it repealed? We know, that they can take it, if they will, and that their Confciences are not too straight laced. The Repeal will be no Benefit, but rather a Misfortune to them. If a Place of Profit or Honour offers, they can as readily take the Sacrament, according to the Usage of the Church of England, as any other Men. An Enquiry only at Bristol will shew, how few did ever refuse it, whenever they had an Opportunity of being Members of the Common Council. But if they are chosen to a Place of Trouble or Charge, as to be Sheriffs of the City of London, then they have this Fetch, that they have a Scruple of Conscience, they cannot take the Test, and so they must be excused from Paying their Fine, which is a Privilege, from which those of the Church of England are excluded. But if the Test is taken off, it can be of no Advantage to their covetous and ambitious Tempers, but it will be a Disadvantage in the other Case, because it will leave them without Excuse. If they would go into the Army, they might shew the Loyalty, which they so much boast of. They are well versed in Wiles and Stratagems, they know how to sap the Ground from another's Feet, and are the best Underminers in the World. But your humble Servants for that. They love the Places, whereby they can serve themselves, but not those, whereby they can serve the Publick.

Fourthly, Let them confider the great Improbability of bringing their Defigns to bear. It is well known, that the Quakers not long ago brought in a Bill, for Cramping the Clergy of the Church of England in their Tythes. This readily pasted the House of Commons, and was with great Difficulty rejected in the House of Lords. The Dissenters of other Persuasions thought from thence, that they had a vast Number of Friends to support them, they readily laid hold on that Opportunity for a Law to repeal the Test and Corporation Asts, but it was rejected in the House of Commons at the first Reading; and there is the utmost Reason to think, that the present Attempt will have the same Fate.

Fiftbly, Let them also consider the Case of the poor Clergy of the Church of England. The Quakers are for Paying no Tythes. The other Dissenters are for Paying as little as possible. There is an Ast of Parliament passed, for the more easy Recovery of small Tythes, that it shall be done before the Justices of the Peace, but they have also the Liberty of Applying to the Ecclesiastical Courts, or to the Exchequer, if they think sit. But it is always represented in the most odious and malicious Terms, if they do. Now if this Bill passes, then all the Dissenters and Quakers are of Course let in to be Justices of the Peace, and so the poor Clergy must be crucified between tween two Thieves. The Country Gentlemen of the Church of England often avoid, and refuse such Offi-The others covet, and are fond of them. Befide this, if a professed Papist will take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy with this Equivocation, that the Oath doth not tell them, how long they shall observe it, and that they will keep it, until they have an Opportunity to break it, and acknowledge the King as fupream, until they can get another; I know not, what will hinder them, or even Jews, Turks or the vileft of Hereticks from being Justices of the Peace, and then they have an Army of Jews, Romans, and all others, to pierce the poor Clergy to the Heart; and they must sue for their own undoubted Rights before those, who are their professed Enemies, and would take them from them; from which they may pray, Good Lord, deliver us. The Diffenters are as tenacious of Places of Profit, and Honour as any others, and I know not how they should part with them to fuch Monsters on this Occasion, but only to unite their Forces, and that what they part with at prefent, may be abundantly made up to them by another total Revolution. I know, that it will be faid, that the diffenting Justices do favour the Clergy, as much as others. But it may be answered, That they may do this at prefent, because it is not Time as yet for them to fhew themselves in their proper Colours (x). Nature may act against Principles, but yet it will return to that which is natural. I only add, that it was one of Julian's Arts, for the Extirpation of Christianity, to seize upon the Revenues of the Clergy, and this will be a hopeful Step for fuch a wretched Purpose.

Sixthly, Let them consider, what Security they offer to the Church of England in this Case, and the Answer is, None at all. The Clergy would be willing to abrogate the Test with all their Hearts, if an equivalent Security was offered them. But they must have none. This doth not answer the Design of the Enemy.

⁽x) Naturam expellas furcâ licet, usque recurret. Horat.

Enemy. Their Intention is to pull down her Fences, and ruin all her Bulwarks, that so (7) the wild boar out of the wood may root her out, and the little foxes may pluck off her grapes, and they may drink of her Wine, until they are drunk, or mad (though they are mad enough already) or at least come in for their Plunder. They were never eafy yet, and it cannot be expected, that they ever will be. So that the first Struggle will be to be equal, and the next of Course will be to be uppermost; which it concerns all the Lovers of our Constitution to prevent, and confequently to prevent the first Cause of it.

Seventhly, It should be considered, that if some Persons are to be obliged, and others to be disobliged, then it is but common Prudence to oblige the Majority. And if it is asked, Who are they? The Answer must be against them. The best Way to know this, is to consider, that since the last Act of Parliament for the better Collection of Briefs. there were feveral of them ordered to be read in the Diffenting Meetings, and upon their Return it appeared, that their Numbers put all together throughout all England and Wales was but as one to fix; and if we may guess by their Charity, it was more inconsiderable. But there is no Certainty from that. Their Teachers judged, that the more Money was collected for other Uses, the less would come into their own Pockets, and so they read four or five Briefs at one Time, and divided that Day's Collection among them all, that as Charity begins at home, fo it might also end there. Let the Legislature but consider the greatest Numbers to be obliged, and they may easily know how to resolve the Question, and that the Body of Diffenters, when others are disobliged, are not able to chuse one Man to represent them in the House of Commons. They may be very good Tools, but as we do not want them, and have enough of our OWIL own always; fo I suppose, that it will not be thought prudent to buy them at fo dear a Price.

Eighthly, Let them consider the ill Consequences of all their former Attempts. First, After the Civil Wars, when they had totally ruined the Church of England, they fell to Biting, Persecuting and Devouring one another. This made the disappointed Party join with the rest to bring about the Restoration, and with it our antient Constitution both in Church and State. This caused a severe Law to pass against the Disfenters in the fourteenth Year of the Keign of King Charles I. which stood unrepealed until the Toleration Act.

Secondly, When King William, our glorious Deliverer came to the Throne of these Kingdoms, the People of Scotland forced him to an unhappy Necessity of altering the Constitution of the Church in that Kingdom, which was foon feconded by the Toleration Act in England. The first of these Proceedings caused the other to be misunderstood, as a Design to alter our Constitution here; and the Confequence was, that the King could never get a Parliament to his Mind. Occasional Conformity, which foon followed, fo foured the Electors, that the longer the King lived, the worse they grew. This retarded all the Proceedings in the War against France, and forced on the Peace of Reswick. This impaired the King's Constitution, almost broke his Heart, and was the greatest Trouble, that he ever met with in his Life.

Thirdly, When King George I. came to the Throne, the Diffenters infinuated into him by Baron Bothmar, that they were his only Friends, and that the Church of England were his utter Enemies; or that the English were Scotch, and the Scotch were English; or that white was black, and black was white. This brought on the Repealing of the Act against Occasional Conformity. This filled the Head of our late gracious King with false Notions and imaginary Fears of the Pretender. To prevent the Consequences thereof he made a League offensive and defensive with the late Emperor of Germany, upon Condition, that we should affift him with all our Forces both by Sea and Land, if he was attack'd by any foreign Enemy; and he should assist us in the same Manner, if any one should endeavour to palm the Pretender upon us. This was perfectly right. Soon after this the Spaniards fet upon the Emperor with a large Fleet in the Mediterranean Sea. The Emperor demands our Succours. Our Fears put him off with many Delays, until he was forced to represent, that the Treaty was broken by us, and he was free from any Obligation. Upon this Sir George Byng was fent with the British Fleet, which burnt and destroyed those of the Spaniards, and refcued the Emperor. And better late than never. Upon this the Spaniards were angry, and threaten us with an Invasion from the Pretender. To prevent this we must tack about, and undo all that we had done before. Thus our late King's Fears occasioned a Signing a Paper with his own Hand to deliver up Gibraltar to the Spaniards, provided the Parliament did consent to it; and after that, to oblige them farther, he fent Sir Charles Wager with the British Fleet, to take Naples and Sicily from the Emperor, and give them to Don Carlos, Son to the King of Spain, which occasion'd all our Misfortunes in Italy, distress'd our Friends, and obliged our Enemies; and now we are at War to pull down, what we thus built up, which may cost many Millions of Pounds, before it is accomplished. After this the French attack the Emperor of Germany, and take Fort Keil. The Emperor sends again for the Performance of our Treaty. We fland off, and do nothing. The French enlarge their Conquests. The Emperor is distress'd, and forced to make a Peace upon Condition of Giving up the Dukedom of Lorain to them. This Dukedom is about an hundred Miles in Length, and the fame in Breadth, and is able to raise twenty thousand Men, and therefore it is forty thousand Odds to the Confederate Army at this Time, and the Giving of Tufcany instead of it, is no Loss to the French, and a poor Equivalent to the Germans. As Lorgin stands on the French Side of the Rhine; so if the Germans had had it now in their Hands, there would have been an easy Passage over that River at Prince Charles's first Approach thither. So that this hath wholly ruined the Operations of the last Campaign, and what the Event of it may be to all Europe, God only knows.

Fourthly, Let them confider the Effects of their Proceedings in the City of London. Here the Diffenters have endeavoured to make an Interest in their several Wards to be chosen Aldermen, when they have had the least Hopes of Success, and one of them applied to the Court of the King's Bench to fet aside a legal Election, but he was cast. This shews, that there is no Necessity of Repealing the Test and Corporation Acts upon their Account. But the Effect is, that they have been always difappointed. This with other Accidents hath united the Livery Men of that great City to affert their antient Privileges in the Election of a Lord Mayor. And this hath also united the Electors of Aldermen in their feveral Wards to disappoint their Ambition, and save them the Trouble of being Candidates.

Lastly, Let them think of the Case in Bristol. There the Mayor and Common Council have for many Years chosen Dissenters to be Members of that great Body. But this hath engaged another Body against them; insomuch that whereas they had before Interest enough to nominate ther Parliament Men, who were often chosen without Opposition, they have lost all their Interest of this Nature, and are not likely to recover it any more. And thus we see the Consequences of the hot, mad and giddy Effects of the Practices of the Dissenters, both in Reference to all Europe, to this Nation, and also to them-

To this it may be added, that as all these Arguments make such an Application improper at any Time; so more especially at this Time. We are now engaged in a foreign War, and what the Event will be, God only knows. However, there is a greater Necessity for an Union, and to prevent Fewds and Animofities at home. But should these increase by fuch Mifmanagements, the Nation will be weakened, our common Enemy will be encouraged, and they themselves may be ruined also in the common Destruction, which they bring upon others.

And now I suppose, that their own Friends will furnish them with another Argument to persuade them to be quiet, which is the great Probability of their being disappointed. Or if they succeed, it will hardly be possible to hold it long. If they are uneafy, because the Acts are not repealed, and they are repealed, the Members of the Church of England will be uneasy, until they have got another. It is not impossible, but that by fuch Methods they may so distress the Nation, and force them to change the Ministry, and chuse another, which may not be in their Favour. That which hath often happened, may happen again, and then they may repent of their Folly, when it is too late, and fay, (2) Who would have thought it? When the French King fent his Armies into Germany, he little expected, that the English Forces would have came on the other Side of the Rhine. The Diffenters say, Let the Church of England be quiet. And we fay, Let them but Practice their own Doctrine, and then every Thing will be quiet. We only desire to keep our own Ground. We envy them none of their Privileges, nor defire, nor ever petitioned to take one from them. We are not willing, that our Bulwarks should be undermined, and blown up. We only stand on the Defensive, and they are the Aggressors. We (2) labour for peace, but when we speak to them thereof, they make themselves ready to battle. But if notwithstanding all, which hath been faid, they will still go on in this perverse Humour, if nothing less than what they aim at, will fatisfy them, and if they make Disturbances und Distractions in the Nation, especially at this critical Juncture, they cannot but be look'd upon as the worst Enemies, which the Government hath, and may at last be treated accordingly. If they are baffled in open War, they are not fure, where the Conqueror will ftop, or that they may not be in Danger to lofe not only the Benefit of Occasional Conformity, but even of the Toleration AET. So that the most friendly Advice which can be given them, is to be eafy, quiet and contented, and not push on Matters to the last Extremity. The Church of England daily prays to God for our gracious Sovereign Lord King George, that God would ftrengthen him, that he may vanquish, and overcome all his Enemies. Let them not prove the greatest Enemies, which he hath in the Kingdom. For God may at last hear our Prayers. We daily pray, that our unhappy Divisions may not disappoint the Designs of our gracious King, nor bring down God's Judgments upon us. They take Methods to foment, and increase our unhappy Divisions, be the Consequence what it will. And certainly, as God doth not require these things at their hands; so neither can it be expected, that the King will give them any Thanks for their Pains.

Besides, there is no Occasion for all this Bustle. There are not Places enough for the Members of the Church of England; fo that what they propose, as an Advantage to themselves, will be a Damage to others. And as to their Usefulness to the State, let it only be put in its due Light. Suppose a Place of considerable Profit is to be disposed of, and there are ten Candidates for it, and that eight of them may be of the Church of England, and two of them may be Diffenters; it is very probable, that each of these may be as useful to the State as the other. So that the Taking in of one useful Member is only the Keeping out of the other, and this is no Advantage to the Publick. The Members of the Church of England will be as tenacious of their own Privileges, as the others are follicitous to take them away. The Taking in of a Member of the Church of England is but as it is used to be, and then every Thing is quiet; but the Taking in of a Diffenter will increase the Feuds and Animolities, and disoblige the far greatest Part of the Nation, which will prevent their Usefulness. And this Consideration may turn the Scale in such a Case. So that let the Dissenters have Patience to stay, till they are wanted, and then they will be fent for without any more to do.

And now, I suppose, that it will be objected, that there is no Need of all this, for the Dissenters have not stirred at all, and we are not to believe all that is faid in the News Papers. To this I answer, that I heartily wish, that there was no Need of such a Treatise as this. But what if there is Need? We have a publick Alarm to be upon our Guard, and this can do no Hurt. But if we will not fence against approaching Dangers, we may be (b) like the People of Laish, careless and secure, until the Chidren of Dan comes, and destroys us all.

I hope, that the Diffenters will not reckon me to be (c) their Enemy because I have told them the truth. I have kept back nothing from them, which is profitable for them to know. I have discovered to them the Strength of their Opponents, as far as I know, or have heard. And if I am reputed as a Traitor to the Church of England, I am contented to bear the Reproach for their Sakes.

I shall now conclude with the best Advice, which I can give to the Presbyterians and the Independents in this Kingdom, which is this. Let them confider feriously, how they can answer these Arguments, which their Enemies will be apt to plead against them in this Cause. And if they cannot do this, let them make a publick Declaration, that they defire no Alteration in our Laws, and are contented with those Privileges which they now enjoy. This is the ready Way to make the Nation quiet and eafy, and heartily and unanimously join together against the common Enemy. This is the ready Way to be bleffed bleffed with a firm, and a lasting Peace. And when this is obtained, let them be willing to have a perfect Union with the Church of England, that so we may be one Fold under the great Shepherd of our fouls. The Church of Logland will gladly receive them with open Arms, like so many loft Sheep, which were gone aftray so long. The Convocation would be ready to unite with them. They were never in a better Temper for fuch a Purpose, than they are now, and are likely to continue so, as appears in the frequent, and late Choice of their Prolocutors. The Bishops, Deans, Archdeacons, &c. who are Members thereof, and were chosen under the present Mini flry, are Men of Candour and Moderation, and I suppose, that all the rest will show themselves of the same Temper. If it pleases God to bless us with a frm and a lusting Peace, I suppose, that there will be no Difficulty to get an Act of Parliament for their Teachers to choose Convocation Men to represent them, as many, or in what Manner they shall think fit. These Affairs may then be calmly debuted and fettled. And if they will agree to Episcopacy, and a Form of Prager in general, I doubt not, but that the Church Convocation would readily agree, to abolith feveral Ceremonies, which they diflike, and leave others at Difcretion, which would be the fame Thing to them. And in such a Case, if they only agreed to subscribe again to the same Arti les, to which they have subscribed already, their Trechers might keep the very same Congregations, and in the fame Places, which they now enjoy; they might be admitted into the Church of England without Re-ordination; they might be qualified for any Manner of Preferments in the Church, which they could obtain; and they might have the Liberty of Marrying all fuch, who should come to them for that Purpole, and of Keeping a Register of Marriages, Births or Christnings and Burials, which should be as authentick as the others. These would be great Advantages to their Teachers. On the other Hand the Hearers would be qualified for all Manner of Places, if they did only receive the Lord's Supper from their own Teachers, as they usually do, and an Act against Occasional Corformity would be to their Advantage. In such a Case neither they nor we should have any Thing to fear from those other little, infignificant Sects, which are among us. We might have fuch Laws, which would more effectually unite us. We might join together in Corroborating the present Laws, and Procuring others for the Supprefiling of Herefie, and all Manner of Vice and Profanenels among us. This might make us a holy, religious and united People, and cause Ged to give us his Blessing for our mutual Happiness, both in this World and the other.

And now, I suppose, it is evident, that I wish better for them, then most of them do wish for themselves. I pray God to direct them for the best. But if they will not hearken to such Advice as this, it is evident, that they do not desire Peace, but flatter themselves with Hopes, that a Time will come, when by their united Porces with Sections, from whence they have fixteen Members to sit in the House of Lern, and five and forty to sit in the House of Common, they may at last overturn our whole Constitution in the Church, as their united Forces have done already, and which it cencerns all, who desire the Peace of this Nation, to endeavour to prevent.
